

CHAIN: INFORMATION FOR CLIENTS

What is CHAIN?

CHAIN (Combined Homelessness and Information Network) is a database that is used to record information about people who have been contacted by outreach teams in London. The system is designed to ensure that people who have slept rough or otherwise spent time on the streets get the help they need, wherever they are in the city.

CHAIN allows homelessness services to keep a record of the work they have done with you, and to easily see what your needs are, so they can help you access services such as accommodation, advice, or help with benefits. Some accommodation services, such as Clearing House, will only accept people who have been recorded as a rough sleeper on CHAIN.

Who manages CHAIN?

CHAIN is managed by St Mungo's, and is funded by the Greater London Authority (GLA). St Mungo's is sometimes referred to as the 'data controller' of CHAIN.

Why is my information being recorded on CHAIN?

Services that record information on CHAIN work on behalf of local authorities, to help people who have slept rough in London move away from the streets. They carry out this work in the public interest, to make sure that nobody has to sleep rough in their areas. This is sometimes referred to as the 'legal basis' for processing information.

What information is recorded on CHAIN?

Information recorded on CHAIN includes:

- Basic personal details such as name, date of birth, and nationality, and some 'sensitive' details, such as ethnicity.
- Records of contacts with case workers, e.g. on the street or in a day centre.
- Arrivals and departures from hostels and other accommodation.
- Support needs information, such as whether you have problems with alcohol or with your physical or mental health.
- Other information that will help to ensure workers understand the services you need, such as whether you have been in the armed forces, care or prison.

Who can see this information?

Information held on CHAIN is only available to carefully selected organisations and workers who really need to see it. These include outreach teams, No Second Night Out assessment hubs, hostels, day centres and some health services. The information is also available to staff at local authorities who are responsible for funding such services, and developing plans to reduce or end homelessness. Information is only shared with the police if there is a concern about someone's immediate safety, or if they need information relating to a very serious offence.

Information from CHAIN is also used in statistics and research to help find ways to end homelessness. Names and other information that could identify an individual are never included in research and statistical reports.

How long will my information be kept?

People can often unfortunately return to rough sleeping after long periods away from the streets, and when this happens it is helpful for services working with them to be able to look up information about their needs, and what services they previously accessed. You could also lose your entitlement to access certain services, such as Clearing House, if your CHAIN record is deleted. For these reasons, your information will be held on CHAIN until 15 years after you last had anything recorded on the system.

What are my rights?

You have a range of rights in relation to the information that is held about you on CHAIN. You can make a request to the CHAIN team at St Mungo's in relation to any of these rights, and they must provide a response within one month. You can make requests via a case worker or directly to the CHAIN team, but if you make a request directly you will need to supply documentation to confirm your identity.

You have the right to be informed about the processing of your information on CHAIN. This leaflet is designed to tell you everything you need to know about this, and is sometimes referred to as a 'privacy notice'.

You have the right to see a copy of the information that has been recorded about you on CHAIN.

If you think that any information that has been recorded about you on CHAIN is inaccurate, you can ask for it to be corrected. The CHAIN team will discuss this with you, and with the services that recorded the information, to see if changes need to be made.

You have the right to object to your information being processed, if you think that this is not justified in your particular case. The CHAIN team will discuss this with you, and with services that have recorded information about you, to see if they need to follow your objection.

You have the right to ask for your information to be erased. This is not an automatic right and will only apply in certain circumstances, such as if you have successfully objected to your information being processed.

You have the right to request that your information is restricted from being accessed or used. You might request this temporarily while other requests you make are being investigated, or permanently if you have successfully objected to your information being processed.

Who can I contact if I have a question or complaint?

If you have any questions about CHAIN, or would like to make a request in relation to any of the rights described above, you can contact the CHAIN team at St Mungo's on 020 3856 6007 or chain@mungos.org.

If you would like to make a complaint about how your data has been recorded or shared on CHAIN, you can contact the Information Commissioner's Office (ICO), which is the body that regulates data protection in the UK. You can contact them on 0303 123 1113 or via their website at www.ico.org.uk.

Alternatively, you can make a complaint to St Mungo's by contacting the Quality team on 020 3856 6068 or complaints@mungos.org. You can also contact the St Mungo's Data Protection Officer on infosec@mungos.org.
